

The naked truth

Robin Djusberg

Am When you were born, from a warm and loving home you were torn,
Em
To a world where you'll be hated, where you'll be fated, F G
to wear the chains, Am Em the chains of shame. Am Em

When you were born, from a light and happy life you were torn, to live with pain and sorrow, where your tomorrow, will be held by chains, the chains of shame

They may say that you're not welcome, that you're not worthy the mud beneath your feet, in this world that tells you how to act, how to look, that you're not good enough, for the rest of us.

Am But hey, where you think you're going? Em
Am It's OK to be afraid but please don't run away Em

The truth is that you're nothing but an angel, a flower that's been Em growing in the dirt, a rainbow in the dark, F
the warm winds through the park, the sunshine on a rainy day G C

But here we are today amongst them, who wish to take it all away, who tells you you're not welcome, to nothing but to wear the chains, the chains of shame.

But hey, where you think you're going?
It's OK to be afraid but please don't run away

But hey, where you think you're going?
Hey, don't you know that it's still cold outside?
